

ABSTRACT

A method and apparatus for adjusting a printer is disclosed. An area is printed over, and sensors are used to collect pixel values over the area. Then, metric criteria are applied against pixel values to determine whether or not to adjust the number-density of dots to improve print quality. The apparatus includes a print means, sensor, and processor. It may also include storage to store the pixel values.